ARMAGNAC & COGNAC

Armagnac and Cognac derive from the Dutch term brandywijn, or burnt wine. The Dutch practice the art of distillation in order to avoid the spoilage that often afflicted their wine during the long journey back to Holland.

Armagnac is an eau-de-vie produced in Gascony in the southwest of France. Wine made from Ugni Blanc and occasionally Folle Blanche grapes is distilled once in a continuous still, producing a rich, full brandy.

Cognac, from the Charente Valley, is double distilled in a pot still, a process that is said to have originated in a dream where the devil threatens to "twice boil a knight's body in order to extract his soul." The dreamer awakes and decides to distill his brandy in order to "extract its soul."

Both Cognac and Armagnac are aged in oak barrels. On the palate, Cognac displays great complexity, balance and nuance – like light dancing in a chandelier. Armagnac is exuberant and occasionally a little gruff, acknowledging its origins in fire and earth.
